APPRECIATION

We at Accurate Mapping Company are happy to have been able to publish this County Atlas for you. We would like to thank the County Courthouse Staff who cooperated so splendidly while we gathered the vital information contained in this land reference guide. We would also like to thank the following: The State of Arkansas Highway and Transportation Department, and the State Land Commission of Arkansas.

... Also, we thank the many ADVERTISERS you see listed throughout the Atlas. It is their support and trust in Accurate Mapping Company that has helped make this publication possible.

The Township and Range System

Soon after its independence in 1776, the United States needed a system of property description for the new territory it had just acquired. For this purpose, in 1785, the Congress created the United States Public Land Survey, otherwise known as the Township and Range System. This plan called for the systematic partitioning of the land west of the Appalacians into square units known as "townships". Each township was six miles on a side and was subdivided into 36 sections, each one a mile square.

A north-south line called a "principal meridian" and an east-west "base line" were established for each region of the west as it was settled. Each township was given a township and a range number according to how many townships it was away from the intersection of these two lines. (See fig. 1) The township number tells how many units north or south of the base line it is; the range number how many units east or west of the principal meridian. One base line and principal meridian may serve an area as large as several states.

There was a problem, however. Since the Earth is round and not flat, it cannot be covered with a regular grid without the squares becoming distorted. Closer to the north pole, the meridians get closer together and the squares are no longer square. To compensate for this, the surveyors had to make corrections to their grid. While attempting to keep each township as close to six miles square as possible, sections along the north and west edges of some townships were distorted to make the grid fit the curve of the Earth. This means that some sections have more or less than 640 acres in them.

Land Descriptions

Within each township, the sections are numbered from 1 to 36. (See fig. 2) An ideal section is one mile on a side and contains 640 acres. Sections are subdivided into halves (320 A), quarters (160 A), half quarters (80 A), quarter quarters (40 A), and so on. (See fig. 3)

Legal descriptions identify a parcel according to its position within a section and its fractional size. "South half, section 8", for instance, refers to a 320 acre parcel comprising the entire southern half of section 8. Another example, the description of parcel A in figure 3 would be:

> The north half of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 5 of township 8 south, Range 14 west.

Or, abbreviated:

N1/2, NE1/4, NW1/4, sec 5, T.8S, R.14W

The trick to reading legal descriptions is to start at the end and read backwards. Begin with the Township and Range, then section, and then fractional part.

Property lines do not always fall on these fractional divisions. In some cases the description may include borders defined by roads or streams, or lines starting at a known point and extending a given distance in a specific direction. For example:

> Beginning at the southeast corner of sec 8; thence north 89 degrees 854 feet; thence west 1636 feet....

The Township and Range System

Soon after its independence in 1776, the United States needed a system of property description for the new territory it had just acquired. For this purpose, in 1785, the Congress created the United States Public Land Survey, otherwise known as the Township and Range System. This plan called for the systematic partitioning of the land west of the Appalacians into square units known as "townships". Each township was six miles on a side and was subdivided into 36 sections, each one a mile square.

A north-south line called a "principal meridian" and an east-west "base line" were established for each region of the west as it was settled. Each township was given a township and a range number according to how many townships it was away from the intersection of these two lines. (See fig. 1) The township number tells how many units north or south of the base line it is; the range number how many units east or west of the principal meridian. One base line and principal meridian may serve an area as large as several states.

There was a problem, however. Since the Earth is round and not flat, it cannot be covered with a regular grid without the squares becoming distorted. Closer to the north pole, the meridians get closer together and the squares are no longer square. To compensate for this, the surveyors had to make corrections to their grid. While attempting to keep each township as close to six miles square as possible, sections along the north and west edges of some townships were distorted to make the grid fit the curve of the Earth. This means that some sections have more or less than 640 acres in them.

Land Descriptions

Within each township, the sections are numbered from 1 to 36. (See fig. 2) An ideal section is one mile on a side and contains 640 acres. Sections are subdivided into halves (320 A), quarters (160 A), half quarters (80 A), quarter quarters (40 A), and so on. (See fig. 3)

Legal descriptions identify a parcel according to its position within a section and its fractional size. "South half, section 8", for instance, refers to a 320 acre parcel comprising the entire southern half of section 8. Another example, the description of parcel A in figure 3 would be:

The north half of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 5 of township 8 south, Range 14 west.

Or, abbreviated:

N1/2, NE1/4, NW1/4, sec 5, T.8S, R.14W

The trick to reading legal descriptions is to start at the end and read backwards. Begin with the Township and Range, then section, and then fractional part.

Property lines do not always fall on these fractional divisions. In some cases the description may include borders defined by roads or streams, or lines starting at a known point and extending a given distance in a specific direction. For example:

Beginning at the southeast corner of sec 8; thence north 89 degrees 854 feet; thence west 1636 feet....
